King of Prussia, Pa., February 16, 2009 — Whether students strive to beat the “Iron Chef” or simply cook a meal on Mother’s Day, the Julian Krinsky School of Cooking instills a love for the art of food. Students receive essential hands-on experience while mastering tasty dishes from Summer Corn Risotto with Manchego Cheese to Chocolate Lava Cake.

“The cooking program is a fast-paced, fun opportunity to develop sophisticated taste buds, a critical appreciation of food, and the ability to create some mouth-watering dishes yourself,” said Guest Chef Instructor and Restaurant Owner Carlo DeMarcco.

Combining a passion for cooking with a high-energy, friendly teaching style the instructors impart a lasting enthusiasm for the culinary arts. Chef instructors from college culinary programs and some of Philadelphia’s finest restaurants work with students, grades 5 – 12, on an individual basis with age appropriate curriculum.

Throughout the two- or three-week sessions, students work four to a station creating a variety of foolproof recipes for fresh, unpretentious modern food with international bold flavors. Chefs focus on the availability, origins, presentation and culture of various foods during theater-style demonstrations and visits to acclaimed Philadelphia restaurants and markets. Each day ends with a final turnout which is judged by the culinary program director and chef instructors.
