FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

King of Prussia, Pa., January 29, 2007 – Ever since Tiger Woods showed up on the golf green, the sport has never been the same; add Michelle Wie into that equation and you can't help but understand why this younger generation is taking over the sport. Teenagers excelling in the competitive golf world are the latest trend, making the under-18 age group the fastest growing segment among golfers. With young stars like Woods and Wie inspiring teens to pick up a club, where are all these young players going to refine their skills? The Julian Krinsky School of Golf Summer Program is teaching teens to enhance their game by working with world-class professional golf instructors.

The Julian Krinsky School of Golf offers beginner, intermediate, and advanced instruction for students ages 8-17, so whether you're just starting or want to seriously sharpen your skills, the Julian Krinsky method can help you compete and win while having fun playing golf and making new friends from over 35 states and 30 countries. Based at Haverford College and Cabrini College on Philadelphia's Main Line, students are able to enjoy practices and golf lessons conducted on 15 golf courses and seven driving ranges, allowing for a variety of experiences for students.

For those following in the footsteps of Woods and Wie, the Julian Krinsky School of Golf offers the Tournament Players Division. This program allows competitive players with a 10 handicap or better to experience the life of a professional golfer. Students play a challenging variety of championship courses and are taught by a team of highly qualified golf professionals from around the world. Each week is devoted to three days of instruction and practice and two days of 18-hole tournament-style play. Students benefit from in-depth professional instruction and play at exclusive golf clubs.
