King of Prussia, Pa., – Julian Krinsky Camps & Programs, an innovator in summer programming, successfully launched a Model United Nations Summer Program at the University of Pennsylvania last summer. High school students gained a unique perspective on international affairs through workshops, guest speakers and UN simulations.

The Model UN Summer Program is the perfect opportunity for seasoned Model UN participants or novices interested in the practical side of international relations. Students serve the role of world leaders and debate the most urgent issues facing our world today. Model United Nations Summer Program students work with participants from all over the world learning to achieve solutions through consensus and compromise.

This academic program has an interdisciplinary approach combining international politics, history, and economics. Students gain experience and knowledge about the political history, voting patterns, leadership positions and alliance to the countries they represent. The session culminates with a Model UN simulation with fellow Model UN delegates representing participating countries.

While living at the University of Pennsylvania, students explore Philadelphia through planned activities each evening. In addition, students visit the United Nations in New York City and Embassy Row in Washington, D.C., as well as regional attractions and destinations on weekend trips.
